Ravi Singh is CEO and founder of ElectionMall™ Technologies, Inc., a non-partisan technology solutions firm that provides citizens, candidates and political parties with the necessary online tools, services and products to help them win elections via the Internet. The company, featured in “Click the Vote” March 2004 BusinessWeek Magazine®, is one of the largest and fastest growing campaign and election technology firms in the United States. With offices in Washington, D.C., Chicago and Los Angeles, the company most recently expanded internationally, opening an office in Monterrey, Mexico. The company provides a unique “one-stop” technology approach for a variety of candidates. USA Weekend Magazine® recently named Ravi Singh one of the “five new powerbrokers whose sites and bytes may well influence how you cast your ballot come November.”

Singh, the first born son of US immigrant parents, began his political journey at the young age of 14, when the US Armed Forces would not allow him to wear his turban in a USA Military Academy. Senator Paul Simon and Congressman Dennis Hastert introduced legislation on his behalf that eventually was signed in 1987 by President Ronald Reagan. This legislation allowed Singh to graduate from the military academy with full military honors as a 2nd Lieutenant, making him the first American with a turban to graduate.

In 1995, Ravi taught citizens at the Illinois State Fair “how to use the internet and surf Yahoo!®.” In 1996, he was asked to serve on the National Asian American Planning Committee, collecting “Internet email addresses” for the 1996 Presidential Election. Singh later worked as an administrative assistant for the Illinois Lt. Governor and State Treasurer. By the age of 25, Singh's passion for politics inspired him to run for public office. He was the first Asian American and Sikh with a turban to run for office in the 42nd District Illinois General Assembly. During his campaign, Singh made history by launching the first “online chat town hall meeting” and the first Internet candidate campaign website in the district.

Singh, described as the “Campaign Guru” in USA Today®, has spoken internationally in Europe and Asia on the role of Internet technologies in campaigns and elections. He has also been a panelist and lecturer at numerous universities and conferences, and has been a guest and commentator on MSNBC®'s “Power Lunch” and other local news channels and radio shows. Ravi Singh founded ElectionMall™ Technologies, Inc., a creative and cutting edge company that has multiple international Patents. In 2004, CNN® and PC Magazine® reported on the first online animation debates, premiering the site www.electionmall.tv. Singh was one of the first in the industry to send a special type of electronic card over the internet known as eYardSigns®, which was utilized in the 2000 Presidential Campaign by both George W. Bush and the Democratic National Committee.

In August 2005, Singh launched his first Webmaster Certificate Seminar, a technology training seminar providing political activists and campaign managers with the necessary tools and knowledge to utilize the Internet and technology in campaigns. Most recently, ElectionMall has qualified as the only online “registering authority” (RA) providing digital authentication certificates for candidates, campaigns and political organizations' websites. The exclusive online program, known as ElectionSecurity™, ensures election and campaign trust, security and protection for online political consumers. Ravi Singh, born and raised in the United States, has a Bachelors of Science from Valparaiso University and a Masters in Political Science from Northwestern University. He is a member of the EAPC (European), IAPC (International), and AAPC (American) Associations of Political Consultants. Singh has authored two books. His first, Leadership by Turban, is now in print, and available on Amazon.com®. His second book 101 Secret Ways of Winning Campaigns Online will be launched in 2006. Singh currently resides in Washington, D.C. and Los Angeles
